- Read and choose the correct answer to questions 25 – 27.
Parents teach their children to be fearful and cautious of specific dangers, such as fire or crossing the road. Anxiety can be useful, because it helps protect the child from harm. However, children can be fearful of situations or objects that adults don't consider threatening. The sources of fear may change as the child matures; for example, a fear of the dark or monsters under the bed may give way to fears of burglary or violence. Tactics that don't work include teasing the child for being afraid, or compelling them to confront fearful situations. Helping the child to deal with fear includes taking their feelings seriously, encouraging them to talk about their anxieties, telling them the facts, and giving them the opportunity to confront their fears at their own pace and with your support.
25. It is stated in the article that ...
A) the best way to avoid fears during childhood is to ignore them
B) parents should not teach their children to be cautious of specific dangers
C) every single child has a fear of burglary and violence
D) the fears of the childhood can lead to some other fears in the adulthood

26. It is clear from the passage that forcing the child to face his fears directly
- A) works when the child isn't eager to talk about his fears
 - B) helps the child to learn the facts and realities
 - C) may protect him from some certain dangers
 - D) is not a good way to follow
27. It can be understood from the article that adults
- A) prefer to cope with difficult situations at their own pace
 - B) may have same fears but may not be aware of them
 - C) should talk to the child about his fears in an open and honest way
 - D) do not want to talk about their own fears unlike children

Read and choose the correct answer to questions 28-30.

Life processes are similar in all animals with backbones. So physiologists can find out a lot about the human body by studying animals such as frogs, rats and rabbits. Sometimes research involves the death of these animals. But physiologists take great care not to hurt the animals. The animals are usually put to sleep during the experiments so they do not feel pain. Many people think animals should not be used for experiments. But it is only by physiological research that medicine has been able to advance. Polio is a disease that attacks the nerves. Millions of people have been protected from polio by a fluid called a vaccine. Tissue from monkeys is used to make the vaccine.

28. According to the passage,
- A) animals can die if not vaccinated by experimental team
 - B) by the help of experimental researches, millions of people have been protected against rats and frogs
 - C) animals with bones are of no great importance in experimental researches
 - D) although many people resist against animals being utilized in researches, it is necessary
29. Experimental researches
- A) are the mere way that medicine can progress
 - B) are carried out to remove infected tissues from the animals
 - C) are of paramount significance for the polio infected monkeys
 - D) include only reptiles to discover the vaccines
30. It's clearly stated in the passage that
- A) millions of people have been killed by polio disease so far
 - B) experimental animals are first put to sleep and then used for research
 - C) monkeys are usually infected with polio
 - D) physiologists can cure rats, rabbits and frogs as well as people
